Stand Up for Transportation Day is a national day to advocate for sustainable and reliable transportation funding before the current legislation expires on May 31, 2015. Long-term federal funding is critical to bring our roads, bridges and public transit services into a state of good repair and allow for more effective growth planning of our transportation systems.

“We join cities throughout the nation saying we need a long-term investment from Congress if we want to be prepared for increasing use of our highways and public transportation,” said DART Commission Chair Steve Van Oort. “We hope our citizens come out and enjoy the festivities on April 9 to show their support.”
